Jorge .

I am trying to organize to have a survey of the Wutunugurra Cemetery before the knowledge is lost and the location of family members are lost to future generations.

If you can assist or point in the correct direction I would be very appreciative

Hi Kelly,

The Community Development Unit at CLC has experience working with Sally Hodson, an anthropologist that has done this type of surveys alongside communities in the NT.

For example, on a current project plan for Yuelamu, Sally will be undertaking research and family consultations to identify nameless graves, paying local research assistants to support discussions with elders, updating the burial register, create a map of the cemetery and discuss improvements to the existing graves.

The approximate cost with contingency was quoted in late 2022 at around $35,000 (GST inc), but obviously a quote for Epenarra would have to be produced.

Please let me know if you want me to pass you Sally's contact details so you can start a conversation with her.

This topic has not been raised at the community development meetings so far, but if it is raised up by community residents during a CLC meeting, this could be potentially considered as a future project.

I hope this is useful.

Regards,
J

Wutunugurra Cemetery Project

Kelly told me that community members would like to identify the graves in the Wutunugurra cemetery. I've been doing this work in some other communities who have also wanted to record this information from the old people before it gets lost. I can tell you a little bit about myself and about these cemetery projects.

I have worked as an anthropologist for 35 years, mostly in WA and the Northern Territory for land councils and for the Sacred Sites mob. A lot of this work has been travelling out on country with traditional owners for native title research and also for site protection but I have also consulted in many communities about different issues.

Last year I helped people at Ringer Soak in the Kimberley to identify graves in their cemetery and this year I have been working with the Yuelamu community to do the same thing. In both communities younger people have worked with me first to mark and number each grave with a temporary label and then to take me around to meet knowledgeable older people. Then we visit the cemetery with these senior people to record names for the graves which don't have any names on them.

The most important source of information about the identity of graves is the old people but there may be some graves that no one knows who was buried there and so I look at burial and other records to see if I can find out anything about these graves. The next step is to create a community burial register and a map of the cemetery showing all the graves which I take back to the community to make sure that I have got the story right. Sometimes too community members have ideas about what improvements they would like done to the cemetery and I write that down too.

With the Ringer Soak community I am now working on the second phase of their cemetery project which is having burial plaques made for every grave with the name of the person, their bush name, their skin, the year they were born, if that is known, and the year that they died. These burial plaques are made of metal and will last a very long time.

I would really like the opportunity to work with your community if you decide that you want to go ahead with this project and would like me to be involved.

With thanks

Sally Hodson
